

What are some types of updates you want to be on the lookout for?

new discoveries

New material that author wants to add, edits and revisions

if someone invents a new H5P exercise that you want to use

Updates on trend data. Want to always use the most recent data. Updates on video presentations.

current event and contemporary examples

Relevant data regarding salaries, median incomes, home prices., demographics. More information about new programs, new stories that should be updated or included

accessibility improvements

adding videos and other multimedia

It would be great to know about broken links to youtube and other resources like that, I notice that on my syllabi and canvas this is a constant issue

What are some types of updates you want to be on the lookout for?

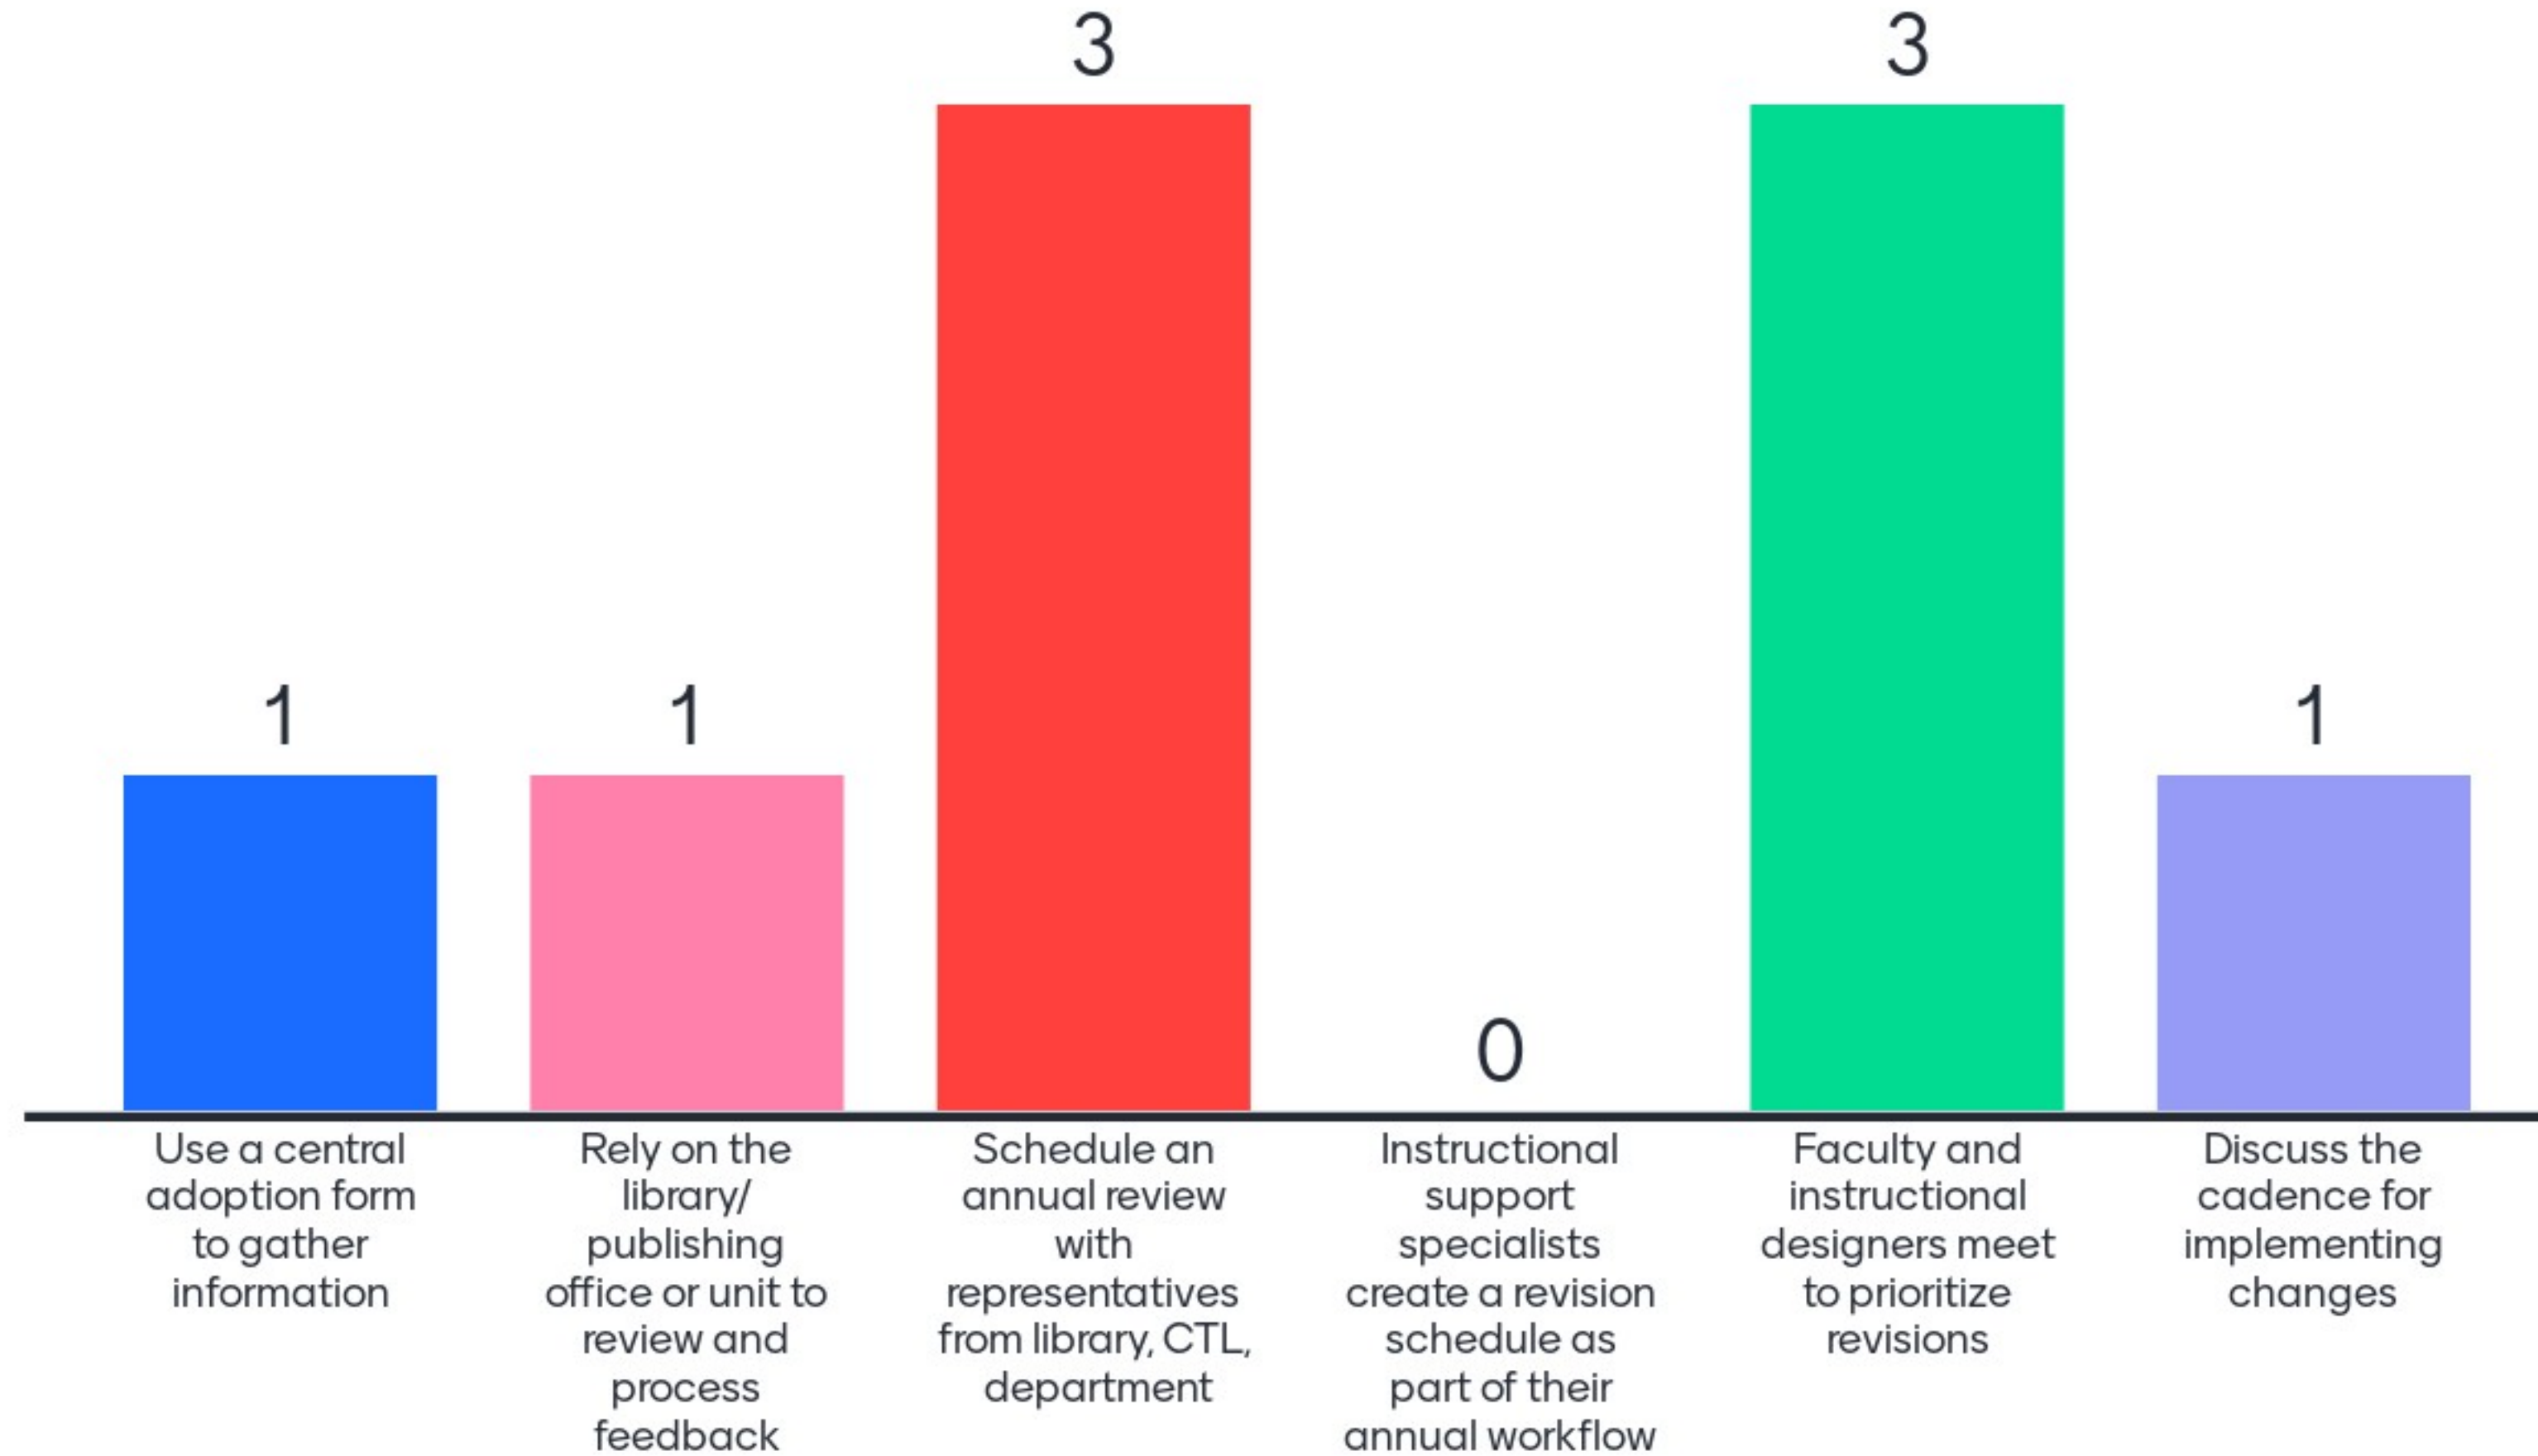

updating using "new" articles, videos, etc

Current events that could be added, data about incomes..

new open pedagogical methodologies that author wants to include.

student feedback

How can you plan for this work as a team?

What are the desired impacts of your resource? (Think big here!)

Usability, Sustained Relevance,

help teachers have a better resource help students make connection between math and their culture and life empower students to be agents for change

Heighten interest in equity issues.

I think that teaching anthropology as a way to learn cultural literacy, especially in the High School level is really great so I would love to see this book used for other early college programs and even in High Schools as well.

More textbook choices for educators connect anthropology to student goals in any discipline they desire to for their career

better student engagement

Increased usefulness to high school and college students

weave equity into what students are learning ANYWHERE
